Perfect Hair
Indicates a natural and healthy condition of the scalp, and of the glands through which nourishment is obtained. When, in consequence of age and disease, the hair becomes weak, thin, and gray, Ayer's Hair Vigor will strengthen it, restore its original color, promote its rapid and vigorous growth and impart to it the lustre and freshness of youth.
I have used Ayer's Hair Vigor for a long time, and am convinced of its value. When I was 17 years of age my hair began to turn gray. I commenced using the Vigor, and was surprised at the good effects it produced. It not only restored the color to my hair, but so stimulated its growth that I have now more hair than ever before.—J. Letter from Rockland.

[Correspondence Whig and Courier.]

The holiday season has come and gone, another pleasant occasion in our lives rolled into the past and forever gone, save in memory. It brought gladness and joy to many hearts, and a pleasant smile to the face of the thrifty tradesman. The pleasant weather, preceding Christmas, brought many people to this city where they were tempted to buy of the beautiful articles artistically displayed in the windows of the dealers in Christmas goods. Most of the traders had a larger and more varied assortment than on previous years. December has been an exceptionally prosperous month with trades people generally. Christmas week the Knox & Lincoln Railroad run a special train between Damariscotta and this city, which afforded ample opportunity for people along the line of the road to visit this city, an opportunity of which many availed themselves. It is hoped tha the running arrangements of the trains may be such that in the near future the people along the line may be better accommocated than in the past. According to present arrangements, shoppers desiring to return to their homes the same day have only one and one-half hours to remain in the city, and until the depot was erected or the present site, it took the major part of the time to get to the business portion of the city and back to the depot again.

We have had but little snow here, only a very few days that heavy teams have used runners, but back from the coast a short distance they are having excellent sleighing.

The changes that are to soon take place in the editorial department of the Courier-Gazette, wherein W. O. Fuller, Jr., is to withdraw and go west to engage in, it is hoped, a prosperous and highly successful banking business, and Herbert M. Lord of the Waterville Sentinel, to assume his place as principal editor, will not be a loss to the paper. Mr. Lord is a young man of energy and perseverance, having a most, if not quite, unaided, worked himself through Colby University, and at times, in order to economize, would walk the entire distance from Waterville to this city. His many friends here will welcome his return.

Mr. Edwin Sprague, Collector of Customs of the port of Waldoboro, will retire from the office the first of next month, having been asked by the President to do so. He has held the office most two years, and during that time all persons having business with the office undoubtedly received perfectly courteous treatment, but in order to make room for a good partisan Democrat, and to show his loyalty to civil service, the President has removed him presumably on the "offensive partisan ship" racket. What a boon to the successful Democratic aspirant that combination "offensive partisan" is! But I think it will be conceded by people who know Mr. Moore, that he is fully as intense a partisan as Mr. Sprague. But that makes no difference if exercised on the side of Democracy.

Among our Rockland people who are spending the winter away, are Gen. Davis Tillson and wife in Florida, Mrs. C. E. Brainerd in Baltimore, and Misses Lillian Sprague and Ella Palmer, two of Rockland's best singers, in Boston, where they are receiving vocal instruction by some of the teachers at the Hub, and it is reported that Hon. Francis Cobb and wife will leave about the first of January for California; C. E. Littlefield, Esq., will leave soon for Augusta, where, unless all signs fail, he will be elected Speaker of the House at the forthcoming session of the Legislature. If elected he will undoubtedly preside to the entire satisfaction of the members who will receive from him respectful and courteous attention. He is a ready and forcible speaker which no amount of interruptions can disconcert in the east, and is a prince of good fellows.

Letter from East Corinth.

VARIOUS MATTERS OF INTEREST

[Regular Correspondence of the Whig and Courier.]

Christmas eve was duly observed at the Town Hall, by a citizens' Christmas tree, with an interesting entertainment of vocal and instrumental music, declamations, readings, etc.

On Tuesday evening, 28th inst., a donation party was given at the Methodist parsonage. There were substantial contributions in money and provisions. The pastor, Rev. A. J. Lockhart, and his family, are held in high esteem. The ladies purchased a barrel of flour and hauled it on a hand sled to the parsonage.

The East Corinth Dramatic Club recently presented the play entitled "Among the Breakers," at Hunting's Hall. They intend to visit other towns, and will give an entertainment worthy the patronage of the people. The play is highly moral, and unites the comic, pathetic and tragic in a very pleasing manner.

Miss Lottie Herrick and Miss A. S. Knox have formed a partnership in the dress-making business, and occupy the north rooms of J. M. Herrick's house. Miss Herrick passed several years under the instruction of Madam Lord of Bangor. Miss Knox has been very successful as a dress and cloak maker here for several years.

E. R. Bean has newly painted the front of his post office, the upper part white, and the lower part, yellow, with dark trimmings. It presents a very attractive appearance.

J. S. Deering has opened a shoemaker shop in this village, and seems to have enough to do.

E. G. Clement, who has been sick with pneumonia, is convalescent.

J. W. Hunting is having built a nice covered coach for winter use on his stage line.

Corinthian Lodge, I. O. O. F., at their meeting Wednesday evening elected the following officers: A. M. Bragg, N. G.; Henry Whittier, V. G.; E. A. Cole, S.; M. F. Dyer, T.; Chas. Megquire, Chas. Bragdon and W. R. Clark, Trustees.

The proprietors and trustees of East Corinth Academy will hold their annual meeting to elect officers and fill vacancies, Monday evening, January 3. This is one of the best and oldest academies in the State, and has been very successful in educational work. Board and rooms for students can always be obtained at low prices. In selecting a school in which to educate their children, parents will do well to carefully consider the many merits of East Corinth Academy.

The Portland Transcript issued its first monthly supplement, Wednesday. It is of the same size as the weekly, consisting of eight pages filled with miscellaneous reading.

Mr. John Emery has returned home to Augusta from the lumber region with a broken hip, occasioned by the kick of a horse. It is a severe injury.

Augusta had a chance to try its new water works at a fire in the Augusta Gas Works, Wednesday. Everything worked to a charm and the fire was put out with small loss.

Hollis Ryan, of Waterville, was found dead on the floor of his sleeping room Sunday morning. He has been an invalid for some time, and subject to fits. It is supposed that he was taken with one in the night and fell from his bed. He was about forty-five years of age.

E. F. Berry, formerly of Rockland, for the past few months connected with the American Bank, Kansas City, has been promoted to the cashier's desk in the Citizen's Bank, Attica, Harper's county, Kan.

Oxford.

Mr. Willard Ames, of Greenwood, a man of over seventy years of age, while on the top of a long ladder breaking the ice from the eaves of his house, fell some eighteen or twenty feet, striking upon his side sustaining severe internal injuries which makes his recovery exceedingly doubtful.

Sagadahoc.

Dunlap Commandery, No. 5, K. T., of Bath, have completed arrangements for their carnival at the Alameda, Jan. 19, 20 and 21. The programme consists of the F. A. Owen Mikado Company the first night, the Boston Opera Company and Lotus Glee Club the second night and an old fashioned promenade concert and dance with music by Chandler's full military band and orchestra, the last night.

Congressman Dingley, of Lewiston was in Bath, Wednesday afternoon and met a large party of prominent shipbuilders and owners in Capt. P. M. Whitmore's office. The free ship bill was discussed and measures devised to oppose it to the utmost. An effort will be made to have an iron ship building plant, and vessels built in Bath by the assistance of government, when new vessels are hereafter authorized for the navy.

Somerset.

Mr. Daniel Paul, of Solon, died at his residence in Solon, Tuesday of last week of heart disease, aged sixty-six years. He had been an invalid for three years and for nearly one year had been confined to the house.

The Somerset Reporter says two intoxicated men from Hartland were driving down the Pittsfield road last Thursday evening, and got on the railroad track where the horse broke his leg. In trying to get the horse up they got him into a snow drift and then had to kill him. One was from Ripley, the other Sangerville.

Ashley B. Tower, of Holyoke, Mass., says the Reporter, has been up river to Madison, North Anson and Solon, and has bonded the water powers at Solon and North Anson for a year. Mr. Tower did not make the examination of the Madison privilege that he wanted to and is to return after the snow leaves in the spring, for a further survey. He is understood to represent capitalists who contemplate the building of a Mammouth Pulp mill either at Madison or on Carratunk Falls, at Solon.

Waldo

Frank Wiley, of Belfast, has completed the marine engine for his miniature steamer and it is a great success, making 1 000 revolutions per minute. Mr. Wiley estimates that the engine will drive his little craft at the rate of three knots an hour which is equal to twenty two knots an hour for a vessel of one hundred feet in length.

A man named Chas. F. Perkins, hailing from Houlton, was arrested in Levant, last week, on charge of abusing a horse which he hired in Belfast, several weeks ago, and afterwards left in the street on a cold day. Perkins settled all the bills against him at Belfast and was allowed to depart. Although Perkins registered at the hotel as from Houlton his real home is in Levant, says the Belfast Age.

Charles E. Watson, of Troy, says he is not insane. Two physicians employed by the selectmen, it is stated, have pronounced him insane, so they have applied for a probate court decree to put Watson in the insane hospital, and have ordered Bangor merchants to allow him to contract no bills. Two other physicians employed by Watson (as he says) pronounce him sane. Watson claims there is a conspiracy to imprison him and get possession of his property. Others say he shows he is unable surely to manage his property. It seems to be a question of where sanity ends.

Washington

The Eastport Sentinel says: Another auction sale of partridges by Uncle Sam will soon take place here. On the steamer State of Maine, there was shipped from St. John a week ago last Monday, two cases for Boston, marked and invoiced as fresh bass. Officer Dougherty, of the Dominion Customs service, who was on the lookout for just such game as these boxes contained, examined the packages at St. John, but didn't look deep enough and only saw a few frozen fish on top, but when the cases arrived on this side they were found to contain 456 partridges as well as a few frozen bass. This is why Inspector Gilman smiles when he meets Inspector Dougherty.

Antoine Nadeau was arrested, Wednesday, at Biddeford, charged with having attempted to blackmail Dr. La Rocque, by threatening to have the latter arrested for selling liquor without a license, unless he, La Rocque, should pay him, Nadeau, $50.

In the case of the poor old man found frozen to death has been rendered. The jury sat upon the debris found in the stove. OUR CIRCULATION.
Contrary to the expectation of some of our competitors, our circulation is constantly increasing, week by week we have added a few hundred to each edition until at length we print more copies than any other paper in the city. Our advertisements are only of the best firms in the country, and any article that is spoken of in our paper can be safely relied upon. The latest space that we have sold is taken by Littlefield's Constitutional Cough Syrup, an article of undoubted merit.
The proprietor of this medicine has made arrangements with W. C. TRUE and CALDWELL SWEET & BRO., for its sale in this city, and has such confidence in its power that he gives every person who buys a bottle the privilege of returning it and receiving their money back if, after using two-thirds of its contents, they have derived no benefit from it. W. C. TRUE and CALDWELL SWEET & BRO., sole agents in this city, guarantee every bottle with a "No Cure! No Pay!"

Eastern Argus and Courier.

BOUTELLE & BURR, PROPRIETORS.

C. A. BOUTELLE, EDITOR

All business letters should be addressed to Boutelle & Burr, and communications intended for publication should be addressed: "Editor of Whig and Courier."

SATURDAY, JANUARY 1, 1887.

Senator Maxey calls the Mugwumps "a pestilent ebullition."

The Maine Legislature meets on Wednesday and Governor-elect Bodwell will deliver his inaugural Thursday.

The Democratic St. Louis Republican confesses that Mr. Mr. Randall will control enough votes in the next Congress to make it impossible for the free traders to accomplish anything.

The Boston Traveller publishes a list of appointments made by "Gov. Rollins, of Maine." Who is this Gov. Rollins referred to by our Boston contemporary? He is a stranger to the people of this State.

Speaker Carlisle is reported as saying he does not think there will be any tariff legislation this winter. That will satisfy the people to a dot, as they are tired of Messrs. Carlisle's and Morrison's free trade doctrine.

Some of our Democratic contemporaries should denounce Senator Morgan, of Alabama, as a traitor to his party, he having declared at the Boston banquet that it was the duty of Congress to preserve the present National Bank system.

The Republicans who voted for Mr. Haines in Centre Township in the Third Assembly District of New Jersey support their votes by their oaths, and prove beyond question that 170 Republican votes were reduced to 152 after they had been deposited in the ballot box. It is by such methods as these that the party of reform hope to steal a Senatorship.

Ex-Senator Rollins, of New Hampshire, in a circular letter addressed to the members of the New Hampshire Legislature, in which he announces that he is a candidate for the United States Senate, to fill the unexpired term of Senator Pike, deceased, promises that if he is elected for the short term, he will not be a candidate for the term that follows.

The name of Mr. Henry W. Grady, of the Atlanta Constitution, is mentioned for the second place on the Democratic ticket. As Mr. Grady is a firm believer in the necessity of protection and if in Congress would doubtless have voted against the Morrison bill, thus placing himself on the side of the men denounced as "traitors" to the Democratic party, his nomination would be rather difficult to explain except on the ground that the party is afraid to go to the people with an out-an-out free trade ticket.

It is now recalled that Senator Voorhees said last summer that he should feel personally disgraced if the Indiana Democrats did not have at least sixty majority in the Legislature on a joint ballot. Instead of sixty majority the Democrats have an alleged majority of two or three and that only by the most unblushing frauds. Whether Senator Voorhees feels disgraced over this result we are unable to say, but it is a fact nevertheless if his party has a spark of honesty it ought to feel forever disgraced at the history of the Indiana election.

Mr. Gladstone's seventy-seventh birthday finds him less overwhelmed with public cares than was the case a year ago, but with better health. Apparently he is still good for many years' public service, and it will be fortunate for Ireland if this should prove to be the case. Among the chief political figures in Europe the Emperor of Germany is probably the only one who is the senior of Mr. Gladstone. The Emperor will soon be ninety-two, and it is to be hoped that Mr. Gladstone will live to an equally vigorous old age.

It has been stated of late that Judge Gresham, of Indiana, would be a candidate for the Presidential nomination, but a reporter of the New York Tribune has been shown a letter from Judge Gresham stating that it is his intention to remain on the bench permanently. Probably the most remarkable thing in the letter, when considered as coming from a former member of President Arthur's Cabinet and from one whose name was being pushed to the front by the former Arthur leaders, is a statement of opinion that Mr. Blaine will be his party nominee in 1888 providing he is willing to accept the position, and will be elected.

It is said that C. W. Button has forwarded his resignation as post master at Lynchburg, Virginia. Button is the Democratic editor, who, after his appointment, began a most abusive attack upon Senator Sherman and other Republican Senators in the columns of his paper which had also indulged in some very harsh comments on Gen. Grant. His nomination was rejected, but the President disregarding the action of that body sent his name in again. Button, however, has decided that he will not be confirmed and has drawn out of the contest. He can now run his mud slinging machine wide open without attracting the least attention.

A Washington correspondent of the Boston Traveller in speaking of the social events at the Capital says: Last Saturday evening's hop at "The Hamilton," inaugurating a series for the winter, was a very pleasant affair. Governor Long, a genial presence, and that of Representative C. A. Boutelle of Maine, Thomas Reed, Judge Scudder, and Frank Stockton and wife, with many other persons of note, added much to the interest—but who that floated on the broad Pacific with Mrs. Alesund and Mrs. Lecks, and ate breakfast resting on the waves, would ever imagine that the Frank Stockton, small, dark, and plain in his general aspect, who sat near us amidst "The Hamilton" dancers, was the man who carried out that curious enigma to its fortunate termination.

M. Grevy receives as President of the French Republic a yearly salary of $240,000, besides the following allowances: $20,000 for heating and lighting, servants and washing, $80,000 for his entertainments and journeys and $25,000 for the maintenance of his game preserves. With respect to the latter, it is worth while noting that the game is no longer sent to hospitals and barracks as in former times, but is sold, exempt from the octroi duty, for the private benefit of the President. The cost of his travels is always defrayed by the railway companies over whose lines he travels as a deadhead, and he has a free box at the Opera and all the theatres. The most perfect of official residences is provided for him in the beautiful and comodious Palace of the Elysee.

The funeral services of the late General Logan occurred in the Senate Chamber yesterday, on which occasion thousands of people from near and far assembled to pay their last tribute of respect to the honored soldier-statesman. The remains were escorted to the receiving tomb, where they are to rest until the question of a burial place is settled, by an imposing procession under command of Gen. Sheridan.

The Bath Independent commenting on the ludicrous appointment of Morton says: Inasmuch as the Bureau was established largely by the influence and at the instigation of Bath shipping people for the purpose of benefiting the American merchant marine, it would have been more proper to have selected a sailor Democrat who lives within smelling distance of salt water than an up country journalist. May a kind Providence watch over American and especially over Kennebec shipping while he is learning. It does seem to the Independent that the very Old Nick himself is at work in Washington, with a special and peculiar though inexplicable grudge against what ought to be the Government's special protege and pride—our long suffering but sturdy American marine!

A Happy New Year.

The eventful months of 1886 have now been numbered with the things of the past and to-day we enter upon the new and untrodden paths of 1887. It is of little profit to enumerate here and moralize upon the multiplicity of incidents and experiences of the past, each having been faithfully recorded in their day and having yielded their lesson, while the facts were still fresh in the minds of the people. The history of the past twelve months cannot fail to have made a lasting impress on up-to-all thoughtful persons, who, profiting by the varied experiences and placing their trust in Divine Providence, will enter upon the duties of the new year with renewed courage and a determination, so far as lays in their power, to make the best possible use of each day. We wish the readers of the WHIG, one and all, a prosperous and HAPPY NEW YEAR.

European War Clouds.

[Boston Traveller.]

The manner in which all the leading European powers are strengthening their armies and navies, taken in connection with the temper of the legislative bodies of such of the countries as have these limitations upon monarchy, is ominous, and there is a growing conviction that war cannot possibly be postponed beyond the opening of the spring. Russia and France are effusively friendly. The former is, there is good reason to believe, bent on seizing Constantinople at any cost, and the desire of France to avenge the humiliation she suffered sixteen years ago does not grow less as the years go by. Austro-Hungary seems to be somewhat reckless but is ill at ease. Great Britian is evidently anxious.

Turkey is one of the doorways to India, and the Sultan is one of the most powerful supports she can have in keeping in subjection her Mahometan subjects in India. She certainly has much at stake in keeping active yet a little longer Europe's "sick man," while she cannot view with unconcern Russia's gradual but steady advance upon the key to India in Central Asia. Italy is watchful, and is evidently proposing in the event of war to make the most of her well-disciplined army and her powerful iron-clads. Great Britain, Austria and Italy would very likely combine in defence of Turkey in case of a declaration of war by Russia.

It is the attitude of Germany which has, during the past few months, puzzled the diplomats, and though she is still suspiciously silent, the warlike preparations she is making indicate that at last the arbiter of the destinies of Europe believes war cannot be postponed. Soldiers at the barracks are having double drilling, manufacturers are, some of them, running double time; the soldiers from Alsace and Lorraine are being quietly sent to Eastern Prussia and Pomerania; the standing army of 450,000 men, to support which all the necessaries of life are taxed to the utmost, is to be increased. It is being recognized that France is determined on revenge, and the theory of Von Moltke that the sooner war comes the better for Germany is likely to be adopted.

The coming conflict can hardly be a long one. Europe has grown small in recent years, and European nations, with perhaps the exception of France and England, are too poor to fight for a long time. Peace has been preserved for months largely because of the attitude of Germany, but Germany's attitude has evidently changed. If war comes, the conflict will doubtless be more general than any since Napoleon's day; and while it is impossible to forecast results, it may be safely said that the probabilities point to a greater recasting of the map of Europe than any which has taken place since the early years of the present century.

Superintendent Crocket's Lecture

The successful teacher applies instruction as a means to an end The child needs development of the training of his natural powers in a right direction, not that he may become merely a tradesman or professional man, but a man in the true sense of the word It devolves upon the school to make the child's natural powers as perfect and complete as time and circumstances will permit The law of mental development was illustrated The limitations which the teacher must wish in the carrying out of this law Short and irregular attendance interferes with consecutive instructions, one portion of a class is prepared for the abstract treatment of a subject while another portion through absence stands in need of explanation Other agencies than the school are concerned in the education of children

There is a wide field for teachers operations The pupil learns to understand the relations which they now bear to each other and the duties which belong to them The child needs other subjects for the broader development of his natural powers History the impression of the inner world of human experience, the outer world or nature, for the culture of the observing powers The question of practical education was then considered and it was shown how it might be conducted without disturbing the functions of the school

Industrial knowledge could be imparted through many of the reading lessons, supplemented by oral instructions Domestic economy, sewing and knitting could be taught by female teachers and suitable work provided for the boys during such exercises If each teacher had faith in his work though this ideal might not be reached the pupils would go forth fully prepared to act their part in life

Prof Moses F Brown, of Tufts college delivered an address on the elements of expressive reading, with illustrative readings The session will close Saturday

LAID TO HIS BEST.

Obsequies of the Late General John A. Logan.

The Scene in the Senate Chamber.

Eloquent Funeral Sermon by Rev. Dr. Newman.

Temporary Interment at Rock Creek Cemetery.

WASHINGTON, Dec 31 The weather is unpleasant and unfavorable to the many thousands who are here to pay their last tribute to the late Senator John A Logan Great crowds made their way from early morning toward the Capitol to view the remains and the time of lying in state was too short to give an opportunity for all to pass by At 11 o'clock the doors were closed to the general public and while two ranks of Grand Army men filled on either side of the bier the undertaker screwed down the lid of the casket and the pall bearers took their places and conveyed the casket to the Senate Chamber

The Distinguished Attendants at the Funeral

The Senators came in singly or in pairs and took the seats assigned them on the left of the presiding officer's desk, leaving three front rows vacant At 11 45 Chief Justice Waite and the associate justices together with the officers of the Supreme Court took the seats assigned them Behind them came members of the House of Representatives The members of the diplomatic corps, many of whom came in dress uniforms, were ushered to seats upon the right and behind them came Secretaries Bayard, Endicott Whitney and Attorney General Garland who were placed in the front row upon the right The President was not present The chair assigned him was left vacant

The galleries were thoroughly filled, the seats reserved for the family of the President were occupied by Mrs Cleveland, Mrs Folsom, Mrs. Vilas, Mrs Manning and Mrs Lamont

The Group of Mourners

At noon a hush fell over the assemblage and as the procession of mourners entered the chamber every occupant of a seat rose to his feet Mrs Logan, heavily veiled, was supported by her son, John A Logan, Jr Major and Mrs Tucker and their son, Logan Tucker, Cornelius and James V. Logan, brothers of the General, composed the mourning process on

Dr Newman's Funeral Sermon

The following is an abstract of Rev Dr Newman's funeral sermon

Again in this Chamber the shrine of the nation's dead Oh! these walls are again the emblems of national grief Once more is heard the measured step of those who mourn the departure of a faithful public servant, honorable private citizen, abiding friend, devoted husband and loving father Only those who thus honored at this shrine of the Republic whose virtues whose services, whose talents have secured for them the distinguished position of Senator of the United States, and where else than here, in the place of honor, the arena of his greatest services and triumphs, where he displayed his eminent talents in statesmanship, where he was respected by all for the purity of his intentions, the ardor of his patriotism, the courage of his convictions, the power of his logic and his unselfish devotion to the public good, where else than here should Logan be honored with the rites of burial

His was an honorable parentage His father's genius and his mother's beauty blended in sweet harmony to bless his childhood Irish brilliancy and Scotch solidity of mind in his temperament, while he stood forth the true American and typical man of the west of whom his nation is justly proud From them he inherited his splendid physique, his capacious intellect and his loyal, loving, generous heart In that christian home his young intellect was developed and his young heart was taught that Divine religion from which he has never wavered, and when the homestead was broken up all he claimed and all he took was the old family bible

Of his power in the nation there can be no question Macauley has said that men eminent in learning, in statesmanship in war are not fully appreciated by their contemporaries, but that posterity does not fail to award them full justice A greater than Macauley has said "A prophet is not without honor save in his own country" It is difficult for those who have not had special advantages in schools or early life to gain a reputation for merits culture and intellectual attainments but it is sufficient to say that what ever position I gan occupied he was always in front

Among Our Foremost Men.

If strong reason, a sound judgment, a capacious and retentive memory, a vigorous and warm imagination and comprehensive understanding are essential to high intellectuality, then Logan ranks among our foremost men Others are great in scientific attainments, in polish of literature, in acquisition of languages, but who excelled him in useful information, in science and literature and law, in knowledge of his country, its history its resources, its wants, its possibilities, its hopes

His was a life of intellectual activity From his admission to the bar at the age of 25 to his place in his State Legislature, to his place in Congress, and to his position as Senator, he has left the impress of his intellect upon the national legislation of this Country which enters into its history for the last 25 years. What great measures of Congress is without his honored name? Future generations will read his great speeches in the "impeachment" on "reconstruction," on "the army" His eulogy on Thomas, his defence of Grant, his argument at that of Porter, will be esteemed masterful among forensic efforts

In all his legislative life he was never crushed in debate His was changeless insincerity. He was never in masquerade. He was transparent to a fault He had a window in his heart. He was never in disguise He was as you saw him. Never did geometric in bring a proposition and demonstration in closer proximity that was the correspondence between Logan's character and his appearance He lived in times of great corruption when the strongest men of both parties fell, either bankrupt by public exposure or by ignorant denunciation, but Logan was untouched. He was above suspicion. The smell of fire was not on his garments. Others made fortunes out of the blood of their country, but after five years in war and twenty-five years in Congressional life Logan was poor in purse but rich in good name. To his only son who bears the name and name of his honored father he could leave left-ill-gotten fortune, but he left him that which is far above rubies.

A Soldier of the Republic

When, in 1862, his friends in Illinois urged him to leave the army and re-enter Congress he made this reply. "I am to-day a soldier of this Republic, so to remain, changeless and immutable, until her last and weakest enemy shall have expired and passed away. I have entered the field to die, if need be, for this government, and never expect to return to peaceful pursuits until the object of this war of preservation and perpetuation is a fact established. Should fate so ordain it I will esteem it the highest privilege a just dispenser can award to shed the last drop of blood in my veins for the flag whose emblems are justice, liberty and truth, and which have ever been, and I humbly trust in God ever will be, for the right"

From his very nature he became the soldiers' friend. It was his tenderness of nature that made him the friend of every soldier in the war In piping times of peace we forget those who fought for us. No so with Logan He carried the years of the war through each receding decade and lived among its stirring memories. He maintained close relations to the veterans. Thrice he was elected Commander-in-Chief of the Grand Army of the Republic. As chairman of the committee on military affairs he was in a position of power.

The Veterans Have Lost a Friend

To-day 250,000 veterans in the Grand Army of the Republic from 6,000 posts feel that they have lost a friend To-day 632,000 pensioners bless his memory To-day 230,000 widows and orphans breathe prayers to heaven for the peace of his soul To-day the spirits of 350,000 patriot soldiers slain in war gather around the great soul of Logan and think that on each returning 30th of May their graves are not forgotten but are covered with flowers

The designation of that day for memorial service was suggested by Logan and he was wont to say "It was the proudest day of my life," and to-day could the 350,000 patriotic dead rise from their graves, each with a memorial flower in his hand, there would rise a floral mountain to the skies, the perfume of which would ascend in gratitude to the God of battles

Dr Newman closed with a glowing tribute to the dead statesman's attributes as husband and father

The Procession to the Grave

At the close of the funeral oration the benediction was pronounced and then the funeral procession reformed to assigned order and filed out of the Senate Chamber On the plaza to the east of the Capitol were ranged the carriages which were to bear the various committees and invited guests to the cemetery Behind these were enfilled the military organizations which were to form the escort, standing at parade rest As the casket, preceeded by the pall bearers, was borne slowly down the steps of the eastern front, the Marine band played the hymn, "Nearer my God to Thee." Every head was uncovered as the casket was placed in the hearse and the military came to a present arms The invited guests were conducted to carriages and headed by the Marine band, playing a dirge, the procession commenced its march to Rock Creek Cemetery, four miles distant

The Funeral Procession

At the head of the procession rode Lieutenant-General Philip H Sheridan in his full uniform, covered by his military cloak He was followed by four members of his staff in life and the Band Artillery with muffled and crepe covered drums playing the funeral march The guns and caissons of the batteries moved in double line and the dismounted artillery, with their red lined cloaks thrown back marched in platoons as infantry The Marines, headed by their band and drum corps, carried arms reversed, as did the militia organizations which came next The colors of all the organizations were furled and draped in black The Grand Army posts and all uniformed delegations, together with six carriages containing the mourners, clergy and pall bearers, preceded the hearse

This was Drawn by Four spirited black horses, covered almost entirely with sombre trappings and cloths, and moved in the centre of a hollow square, formed by its Grand Army escort A long double line of carriages closed the procession The broad streets were kept clear of the crowds by the police, but the sidewalks throughout the populous parts of the route were thronged, despite the terribly inclement weather At 3 40 the large bell at the cemetery began to toll and the head of the procession passed slowly through the entrance to the encampment of a funeral air from the military band General Sheridan, accompanied by an orderly came in advance and took up his position at the tomb where he was joined by General Ordway and staff

The procession wound slowly beneath the evergreen arches and the artillery formed a line in front of the tomb until the rest of the carriages came up They then formed in fours and followed by the military contingent, took up their position in the road to the north of the tomb The pall bearers alighted and took their places on the foot walk While the hearse slowly turned the road at the foot of the hill the Marine Band, posted opposite the tomb, began to play "Nearer My God to Thee" The casket was removed and placed on a bier at the entrance to the marble vault By this time the occupants of the carriages had alighted and remained standing on the foot walk

of the dead Senator's family drove up and took a position directly in front of the tomb John A Logan, Jr, alighted, but Mrs Logan remained in the carriage throughout the ceremony

Standing near the head of the casket Department Chaplain Swallow began to read the burial service of the Grand Army of the Republic The scene was very impressive Surrounding the casket stood the members of the Cabinet, Senators and Representatives, army officers of high rank and gray haired veterans of the war, with uncovered heads, while in a low but distinct voice the chaplain read the simple but solemn burial service When he had finished Rev Dr Newman stepped forward and in an impressive manner delivered the Lord's prayer and concluded with the benediction,

The Band Began to Play Softly

As the pall bearers bore the casket up to the tomb, the trumpeter, standing at the entrance to the tomb, raised the instrument to his lips and broke the dead silence with "taps" "lights out" The casket was uncovered and some of the dead Senator's relatives and friends passed through the entrance and took a last look at his features After a few moments the cover was replaced and the case enclosing the casket fastened with thumb screws Meanwhile many military organizations had taken up the homeward march, the carriages following rapidly, excepting that occupied by Mrs Logan and her son, which remained long enough to enable her to give some directions to Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms Christie, regarding the disposition of some of the flowers The remainder of the floral decorations were then conveyed to the tomb, completely covering the casket The key grated in the iron door and the illustrious dead was left in solitude

A Guard of Honor

After the ceremonies at the tomb were over Deputy Sergeant-at-Arms Christie called on Gen Hartzuff at the Soldiers' Home, and suggested the propriety of having a Guard of Honor over the remains Gen Hartzuff at once called for volunteers from the residents at the Home and in a short time a number of veterans responded to the invitation A volunteer guard will be furnished day and night in two hour watches, until a force of regular soldiers is detailed for guard duty by the Secretary of War.

The floral tributes were many and in various shapes and sizes, some of mammoth designs and most elaborate workmanship, and others the plain and unpretending tributes of the humble admirers of the statesman.

A Success Liver

Causes the Stomach and Bowels to become disordered, and the whole system to suffer from debility. In all such cases Ayer's Pills give prompt relief.

After much suffering from Liver and Stomach troubles, I have finally been cured by taking Ayer's Cathartic Pills. I always find them prompt and thorough in their action, and their occasional use keeps me in a perfectly healthy condition.—Ralph Weeman, Annapolis, Md.

Twenty-five years ago I suffered from a torpid liver, which was restored to healthy action by taking Ayer's Pills. Since that time I have never been without them. They regulate the bowels, assist digestion, and increase the appetite, more surely than any other medicine.—Paul Churchill, Haverhill, Mass.

INVIGORATED.

I know of no remedy equal to Ayer's Pills for Stomach and Liver disorders. I suffered from a Torpid Liver, and Dyspepsia, for eighteen months. My skin was yellow, and my tongue coated. I had no appetite, suffered from Headache, was pale and emaciated. A few boxes of Ayer's Pills, taken in moderate doses, restored me to perfect health.—Waldo Miles, Oberlin, Ohio.

Ayer's Pills are a superior family medicine. They strengthen and invigorate the digestive organs, create an appetite, and remove the horrible depression and despondency resulting from Liver Complaint. I have used these Pills in my family, for years, and they never fail to give entire satisfaction.—Otto Montgomery, Oshkosh, Wis. ††

We wish you a Happy New Year!
And for your paper we thank you,
Which you daily send to us here;
Without it what could we do?

We do like to read it so well,
For the news we all like to hear;
Words are not mine the half to tell
The great pleasure it gives us here.

It is to us a dear old friend
That we greet with gladness each day,
And our thanks to you we would send
On the morning of New Year's Day.

A Fair Dynamiter.

When Mrs. Ezra D. Lincoln took a tiny house at Highgate some seven-and-twenty months since, there was more stir among her new neighbors than is usual when a strange sojourner is first seen in a London suburb. She was a widow very pretty and very young—three-and-twenty at most, even the old maids admitted—and there was an attraction about her which made itself felt not only by the young men, but by their sisters and mothers as well. And so it came to pass that before she had been established many months in her new quarters, a number of pleasant people had come to the conclusion that it would be well to call upon the new-comer, albeit that Highgate is in its mild way very exclusive indeed, and no one knew more of Mrs. Lincoln's antecedents than she chose to tell.

This, in truth, was not very much, for though Mrs. Lincoln proved to be even nicer at close quarters than every one expected, and was the gentlest of her sex, to judge from her words and ways, she had all the savoir-faire of a woman of the world, and contrived to take care of herself in the meekest manner imaginable. She was an American, she said—and her speech betrayed her pleasantly—and had come to Europe partly on business—the nature of which, however, she never even hinted at—and partly on pleasure; and she was not so well off as she could wish, for her late husband had lived long enough to accomplish the task of "making his pile" and also to set about that of spending it with undue rapidity. People who are quiet and unconcerned in their self-assertion seldom fail to be accepted at their own estimate, and there was soon an end to all speculation as to Mrs. Lincoln's earlier life. Even prim Miss Warburton was ready to welcome her within the charmed and charming circle of which she was almost the centre; and when it began to be noticed that Tom Warburton and the widow seemed to have a good deal in common, the young man's sister looked indulgently on the friendship, and took no notice at all of certain kindly hints which came to her ears from several quarters, thinking that she knew her own business a good deal better than her counsellors could do.

Now Miss Warburton's one aim and object in life was the welfare of her younger brother, whose housekeeper, and, so to speak, duenna, she had been since his appointment some years before to a clerkship in the House of Commons. She essayed to make his home comfortable, so as to guard him from undue affection for club life, and as far as in her lay she tried to shield him from all such sirens as were likely to consider a young man in his position a suitable parti. Though the Warburtons were not wealthy, they were of opinion—no doubt for sufficient reasons—that they were a peg or two above most of their suburban acquaintances. This, indeed, they kept to themselves; but the effect of their private reverence for their pedigree was that Miss Warburton had decided that her brother should not be allowed to marry until he could afford to do so "in his class," as she put it; and that Tom Warburton toiled secretly and steadily at certain enterprises quite unconnected with his official occupation by which he hoped to rebuild the somewhat fallen fortunes of his family. He was a good fellow, though perhaps a trifle heavy in hand, and afflicted with a kind of shy self-consciousness which made him exceedingly awkward and even helpless at times; and underneath an unattractive manner he had plenty of ability and aptitude for work. Tom Warburton might be in certain way the butt of his male associates, and it was not uninviting to sharpen the lows of moderate calibre to exercise their wits on a solemn man who would be sure to hit back too slowly, or not at all; but he had a secret and superior satisfaction in the consciousness that he could do what is only granted to the few to do well, and that it would be a revelation to his tormentors if he were to make it known that he was the author of certain clever serial stories which had run successfully in more than one popular periodical. It was part of his policy to write under an assumed name—a better-sounding one, moreover, than his own—and the confession of his authorship was reserved for the time when he should have written something really to be proud of.

The secret, accordingly, was carefully kept, and no one of Highgate knew anything about it, except Mrs. Lincoln, who found it out for herself one day when she and Miss Warburton had afternoon tea with one another at the widow's cottage. The newest number of "Tuburnia" lay on a dainty little table by Mrs. Lincoln's elbow, and she was full of the new story which had just appeared in its pages.

"I should like to know Mr. Cyril Wentworth," she said—such was Tom's nom de guerre—"I think he must be a very brilliant man."

Now Tom's authorship was to his sister as the apple of her eye, and she had a very high opinion, indeed, of his powers; so that it was no small privation to her to be debarred from talking over her triumphs, and no small misery to have to sit still sometimes and hear his contributions coldly criticised by some chance acquaintance. Moreover, she had never heard any one conjecture before that "Cyril Wentworth" was a brilliant man. Plain-talking, careful, and pleasing all the world knew him to be, but when Mrs. Lincoln called him brilliant in her frank, eager way, the spinster's usually well-regulated heart gave a leap of delight that knocked her judgment over altogether, and in one impulsive moment the cat was out of the bag. In the next the poor lady felt that she was a traitor, but it was too late. The only thing to do was to swear Mrs. Lincoln to secrecy, and this was duly done. After that Tom was told, and did not seem to mind at all; in fact, he spoke quite freely to the widow on the subject, and the secret became a kind of bond between the three which tended to ripen their already close acquaintanceship into something stronger.

Miss Warburton had now not only a ready listener to her long pent-up literary reminiscences of her favorite writer, but a clever critic who could discern hidden gems of genius where perhaps but for her they would never have been found out even by their originator; and Tom Warburton soon overcame his shyness so far as to talk over the story on which he was engaged with the widow, and, as luck would have it the adoption of certain suggestions of hers resulted in a very cordial editorial encomium when the story was sent in and accepted. This was not a bit wonderful, for the widow was herself not without literary aspirations, and Tom's confessions had been repaid in kind. Alas! she had not been successful at all as yet, but she was still undaunted and meant work; and Warburton saw, or thought he saw, in a maiden MS. that was shyly submitted to him for criticism a subtle brilliancy which his own plodding performances were wholly without. It was crude, hasty, and inconsistent, but clever, original, and quite worth working up. In his hands such a tale would soon become far more salable than anything he had ever written; in hers it was not worth the paper it was written on. Then he thought of sundry literary partnerships which were said to have proved successful from a financial point of view, and—who knows how it happened?—such another partnership was suggested, considered for a few seconds, accepted, and put into working order, one Saturday afternoon, when Tom Warburton had walked over alone to Mrs. Lincoln's house to return the MS. of her story.

That evening Tom Warburton and his sister had quite a furious quarrel. The gentle spinster's eyes were opened to what she might have seen long before, and she denounced the partnership in terms which only tended to make her brother absolutely bent on its fulfilment. Tom did not understand why his sister was so angry, and her sudden change of tone in speaking of Mrs. Lincoln—who had till now been the very sweetest of her sex—nettled him greatly. He would have his way, he said, in short—and he had it. The two partners passed a delightful Sunday afternoon together in Tom's study—where, of course, they had to work as far from books of reference at hand; a pleasant plan of the proceedings was projected, and a dear little love-scene was touched up by the joint pencils of the allied artists; and when Miss Warburton came smiling into the room, equipped for a walk, Mrs. Lincoln's pretty head was bent low over a little billet-doux composed by the heroine to recall the already jealous hero to his allegiance.

"Look here, Miss Warburton," said the widow with her most winning smile; "do look here. Is not this something like business?"

Miss Warburton did look, and thought it was, for "dearest T." was implored by his "loving A. L." in very tender terms to let no one come between them, and the missive wound up with the entreaty that the lover would meet the lass "at Westminster, on Saturday," in order to "put everything right" in spite of "the espionage to which they both were subject."

"And who are 'T.' and 'A. L.'?" inquired Miss Warburton sweetly, but with war at her heart, for what could "T." stand for but Tom, and "A. L." surely hinted at Ada Lincoln?

"Oh, Theodore Droosten and Agnes Lloyd our hero and heroine," said the little widow innocently. "I chose the names when I thought of the story, in America. Aren't you coming to help us, Miss Warburton? It is such fun."

"I am sorry that I cannot, dear; I have promised to go to the Burchetts', but I am sure you don't want me. Tom never lets me—"

"Going to the Burchetts?" said Tom, a little ruefully. "John Mayne is going there this afternoon—"

Nor John Mayne was no less a person than the editor of "Tyburnia," and Tom Warburton had the best reasons for wishing to stand well with him; and his guilty conscience smote him as he remembered that the great man had half hinted, during a hurried meeting in the street, that he hoped to see him at the Burchetts' on Sunday, and that he had something to say to him. His sister had been told of it, and had not forgotten; and was he not at war with her? The remembrance was for the moment bitter, but did not spoil his afternoon's enjoyment, and when Miss Warburton went her way, vowing that he should be "delivered from that Jedelicate Delilah," he returned to his work, or play, while never it was, with zest. But the scene, like all things that are pleasant and human, came to a conclusion at last, and then his practical habits had the mastery once more, and he began to question himself about the results of his Sunday's work, and consider whether they had been such as to outweigh the advantages of a tete-a-tete with the editor of "Tyburnia."

"Was Mayne there?" he asked his sister, rather faintly, in the course of an almost silent dinner, an hour or two later.

"Oh yes, and he wants to see you particularly. He will dine with us next Sunday, and as I came home I asked the Burtons and Whartons to meet him, and Mrs. Lincoln of course."

II.

Tom's conscience smote him once more—harder this, time—as he recognized the forgiving spirit of his sister, who had covered his retreat in spite of his hasty words of the night before; and peace reigned again between them. As for Miss Warburton, she was content, for she believed that now the game was in her own hands. Mrs. Lincoln, however, enjoyed the work of the succeeding week-days less than she had expected. Tom had vowed within himself that the partnership must mean business and not play, and that his "quarterly" must be got through; and his sister's amiable efforts to give the partners every opportunity of meeting kept him up to his resolutions. Meet they did, at odd hours and seasons so as to suit Tom's engagements, and work they also did; but the poor little widow began to feel as if she were at school again, and actually grew jealous of the actors and actresses in her own love story, who seemed to have monopolized all the attention which Warburton had before been only too willing to give to herself. Tom saw nothing of what was taking place under his eyes, despite his own immediate share in it; but he was conscious that Mrs. Lincoln was not nearly so "smart" as he had supposed, and resented her ways of wasting time and talking out of season as well as in, and by the next Sunday afternoon the relations between the joint authors had become so strained that something like a quarrel very nearly occurred. Mrs. Lincoln's cheeks were flushed and her eyes bright with anger when she went down to dinner; but that emotion so well became her that Mr. John Mayne, who was something of a lady-fancier, pronounced her in his own mind the prettiest widow that he had met for some time, and proceeded to do all that in him lay to win his way into her good graces. This was at the moment not difficult to do, for the would-be authoress was more than prepared to fall down and worship so great a demi-god as this successful editor; and as the latter soon succeeded in possessing himself of her confidence on the subject which was uppermost in her mind, the wicked thought occurred to this weak woman that she might do without Tom Warburton after all, and that the way to literary life might be as smooth as the soft sentences of her new friend suggested. Before the evening was over Mrs. Lincoln had accepted an invitation to visit the sanctum which so many toiling tale-tellers found severely inaccessible, and the deity who reigned there departed with a half-formed conviction that he was smitten with the charming widow and the certainty that she was more than half in love with him, while poor Tom Warburton kept wondering why she "would not play any more" now that playtime had come, and even the recollection of a very practical ten minutes' talk with the great man before dinner could not console him for his fair partner's parting snub. Miss Warburton, however, chuckled to herself in secret, and her chuckling did not grow less cheerful when two days after she found herself the bearer of a somewhat curt request to her brother that he would "Send Mrs. Lincoln back her MS., as she had now no time to go on with the story."

"Her MS., indeed!" growled Tom, with rising wrath. "Confound the woman, what does she mean? I have wasted a week in licking her rubbish into shape, and now nothing is to come of it."

However, he sent every scrap of paper connected with the ill-starred story, along with a short but very civil note, begging Mrs. Lincoln to finish and publish the novel without reference to him in any way. This, however, was not what Mrs. Lincoln wanted, and her answer was neither short nor civil. She wished for her own story, she said, and would not touch a line of the work that had been done jointly, and returned half the MS., which only served to bring honest Tom's ire to boiling-point, for to him it seemed insanity that no one should benefit by that week's work. And after this things took place over which I would rather draw a veil, for two estimable young people lost their heads and their tempers, as perhaps they might not have done had not their hearts been lost already, and behaved badly and rudely to each other, while the flame was fanned by an amiable and kindly lady who had never done a vindictive action or said an unkindly word in her life before. The MS. kept travelling between the two houses till Miss Warburton's servants had strict orders to receive neither note nor parcel from Mrs. Lincoln's; and on Christmas Day the widow cut the Warburtons in the sight of the whole congregation outside Highgate parish church—and went home and wept; while Tom retired to his den a miserable and, as he thought, heart-broken man.

* * * * *

One Saturday morning late in January the widow wept once more—this time over a letter from her lawyer; but it was not of the lawyer that she was thinking.

"I will see him, and have it out," she cried. "He can't refuse me there. And if he does, he can't refuse a letter."

She was very quick in her ways, and soon her tears were dried, and she was fairly started in a hansom from the bottom of the Hill, quietly glad and veiled as became her errand, en route for the House of Commons. Of the inner workings of that ancient institution she knew nothing at all, but she had a vague notion that Warburton might be found there, and that if she represented herself as calling on business, he must see her, or at least receive the papers which she had brought with her. So she made her way with confidence among the Saturday sightseers, and, when she found that she had come upon a wild goose chase, her disappointment was keen—it was to despair. Weeping once again under her veil, she wandered hardly knew where, but she will scarcely be considered blameworthy on the score of her case at the end of Westminster Hall when she became conscious that a rather manly looking person who brushed by her had picked up her packet, and started in pursuit, with an angry cry of "Stop that!" dropping in her sudden excitement the pretty little bag containing the precious MS. which she had carried under her cloak. Of what followed Mrs. Lincoln could never give any clear account. She had only a confused remembrance of a terrible report like thunder close beside her, of cursing men and screaming women, and the noise of glass falling like hail—and then she was in Palace Yard in the hands of two policemen, and six or eight more seemed to be keeping off an angry, murderous-looking crowd, and stormed and gesticulated at her hideously. Was it a nightmare? or was she about to be lynched in London, and under the shadow of the English Houses of Parliament? It was all unreal, and yet all had a terrible reality. And there close to her was Tom Warburton himself—not quiet and hesitating and humble of manner as she had seen him before, but quick and stern, and almost savage, and apparently in hot conflict with a constable for the possession of her precious bag. The whole thing was over in a second, as it seemed, yet every word came clearly and slowly to her ears.

"Dynamite?" Tom was saying. "Nonsense, you fool. Seize an innocent lady and let the blackguards who did it get clear away? There's no dynamite here"—and he made a motion as if to open the bag.

"For God's sake don't, sir," cried the constable, and then he closed with Tom pluckily enough, seeing that he believed implicitly that he was rushing on the same fate which a few minutes before had befallen the brave fellow inside the Hall who tried to carry away the explosive by which all the mischief had been done. But even as the man grappled with him Tom had touched the spring and turned the bag mouth downward, and the crowd scattered hither and hither pell mell, and the plucky policeman himself started back, leaving Tom in possession of the field—with the MS. of Mrs. Lincoln's love-story lying at her feet.

"There's your dynamite, you cowards!" she heard him say, and she saw the crowd surge back, and the leaves as they fluttered hither and thither in the wintry wind here picked up by one hand and another; and then Tom was at her side and in angry colloquy with the policeman who still detained her, and then all four were in a cab on their way to the nearest police-station.

* * * * *

It was late in the afternoon when Tom and Mrs. Lincoln started together for Highgate. Of course the police were greatly annoyed with them both, but there was no thought of an arrest; and the expedition to the police station had merely been made on Tom's own suggestion, so as to get his companion quietly out of the way. As for the police, they were angry because they had made fools of themselves and their folly had been shown up before all men; they knew perfectly well who and what Warburton was, and since the opening of the bag there could be no pretence of suspicion against the widow. So, after a good deal of talk, the incident was closed, and the pair found themselves in a hansom en route for home, with much to tell each other that both found far more interesting than the news that thrilled London that afternoon and was being flashed all over the country. And Mrs. Lincoln, though she had had no hand in the explosion at the House of Commons, had in her own way a far greater success that day than the real dynamiters; for Miss Warburton's little scheme was clean blown to pieces before the bottom of Highgate Hill was reached, and another partnership projected between the conspirators which would not be easy to dissolve.

* * * * *

But Miss Warburton was a brave woman, and one more effort must, she thought, be made to serve her brother. Tom in the fullness of his heart told his sister everything, and the good lady's opinion of Mrs. Lincoln was in consequence lower than ever. In the morning, therefore, she went forth just as the Sunday papers were being cried—for Sunday papers were then to highly respectable Highgate—and when she was ushered into the presence of her enemy, the widow was deep in the perusal of one of these highly objectional prints.

"Mrs. Lincoln," began Miss Warburton, plunging in medias res, "this affair will ruin my brother. He has told me all about it, and I am sure that after all that has occurred, a marriage with you would be fatal to his prospects. I don't mean to say that you had any hand in the dastardly attempts which your countrymen are making to blow us all up, but you have been in the hands of the police on suspicion of it, and—and—we don't know who you are; and altogether"—here the good lady's breath failed her a little, and her courage, too, for the gentle widow was eyeing her coolly, with an amused expression of countenance that was rather disconcerting.

"Have you seen this?" she asked quietly, handing the Sunday paper to her visitor.

Miss Warburton took it mechanically, and as she read, her wrath changed to horror. There was a graphic account of the whole affair, under sensational headings, of which the first that caught her eye were 'Clerk of the House of Commons Implicated,' 'Mr. Thomas Warburton's Love-Letter,' and 'A Fair Dynamiter.' There, too, was a verbatim reproduction of that unfortunate billet-doux which some enterprising pressman had picked up.

"He is ruined!" screamed the poor lady; "he can never show his face at the House again. I know him. He will never stand the ridicule of his friends after this; he will have to resign his clerkship!"

"I hope he will," said Mrs. Lincoln; "I want him to come over to America with me."

"You are a bold, bad woman," screamed Miss Warburton, furiously; "you have brought my brother to beggary, and you exult over it!"

Mrs. Lincoln's eyes flashed dangerously, but she still spoke quietly.

"I do not think I have ruined your brother," she said, "and if you will have patience to read a little more you will see who I am and whether I should be a disgrace to your family."

She put into the hands of the spinster that lawyer's letter over which she had herself wept the morning before, and a daily paper of a not very recent date containing a long law report. "By the way," she said, "my name is not really Lincoln, I am the Ada Latimer mentioned there." And then she left the room, and, a few minutes later, the house.

"She is going to Tom!" cried Miss Warburton, starting up; and in truth she was, for the thought had suddenly struck her that he too might buy a Sunday paper, and she had not told him all. Miss Warburton, however, did not go in pursuit, for her eye had caught a sentence in the lawyer's letter which made her forget Tom and everything else. The newspaper story was exciting enough.

It was the story of a successful claimant to a large estate—a young widow whose father had gone in quest of fortune to the United States years before and been lost sight of, and who by a series of deaths in the old English family from which she had descended had become a very great heiress indeed. The claim had been fully established before the courts and the lawyer's letter addressed to Mrs. Ezra D. Lincoln, made it clear to the bewildered Miss Warburton that the designing widow with whom she had been waging war, was no other than the wealthy Ada Latimer whose cause celebre had been the talk of the town for months.

"How shall I ever face her again?" cried the poor lady, wringing her hands. But that difficulty was soon solved, for Tom and the widow were in the room before she had fully realized the seriousness of the situation; and in less time than it takes to tell it, the two women were in each other's arms.

"But why did you keep it all a secret?" Miss Warburton asked, half an hour later, as if with a last effort at self-defence.

"Only because I did not want to be christened 'the Claimantess,' and because I was afraid somebody might want to marry me for my money," Mrs. Latimer answered, laughing. "Tom doesn't," she added. "He was kinder to me when I was taken for a dynamiter than he ever was before."

* * * * *

What a sensation pretty Mrs. Latimer's quiet wedding made in London some months afterward is known to all the world, and people have not even now quite forgotten their disappointment at the immediate departure of the happy couple for the United States. All sorts of things have happened since then, though the time is short, and the "dynamite scare" has now become hackneyed; but if Tom Warburton should take it into his head to come back to England with his fair dynamiter next season, or sooner still, in that opportunity of "lions," the silly season, he will no doubt be horrified at finding himself the rage.—Belgravia.
